An unidentifiable figure, made up of two contrasting parts, a body dressed in the most anonymous manner, on which instead of a head floats an enormous orange sphere with a stylised face expressing standard vacuity, like the dress: this is the art of living, of one who knows how to disappear into the environment, a single individual, but also part of a larger whole in which he or she is dissolved.

The Sky Bird, created specifically as a symbol for the Belgian national airline Sabena in 1965, is one of the artist's last works before his death: a significant tribute to a life dedicated to art, but also the melancholy image of an animal in the last leg of its journey.

This artwork is called the Pilgrim and was created in 1966 this artwork makes me feel uncomfortable since there is a floating head and as if there is an invisible man standing next to it but i think that René Magritte was aiming for an uncomfortable vibe in his painting for his viewers.

Decalcomania is a 1966 painting by René Magritte. Decalcomania is often shortened today to decal. A bourgeois „little man“ is standing looking away from the viewer, with his typical bowler hat and black trench coat. A curtain has a cut out of this man next to him, which shows the background a beach and ocean.

National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C.

The National Gallery of Art, one of the richest art museums in the world, houses the most important art gallery in the United States: it is made up of two buildings, whose vast exhibition area has allowed the artworks to be exhibited in order to optimize their vision, according to the most modern museological criteria.

One of the paintings completed near the end of Magritte's life was The Blank Signature in 1965. The painting also goes by the name Le Blanc Seing and La Carte Blanche. Magritte's paintings are often illogical and play with the viewer's mind. What stands out about The Blank Signature is that it literally is illogical and inconsistent because it is an optical illusion.

Magritte used the image of a man wearing a bowler hat in several of his paintings. This painting is perhaps not as well known as other paintings by Magritte, nevertheless, it is easily identified as a painting by Magritte and recalls the well known painting The Son of Man.

1964, Ceci n'est pas une pomme: it is not the first time that Magritte denies in the title what is represented in the painting; as with the famous pipe, also in this work the author wants to emphasize the illusory nature of art: the painted apple is not an apple, it remains a painting. Magritte likes to bewilder us, confusing mind and eye. And so, we no longer know what a dream is and what is reality...

Utsunomiya Museum of Art

Utsunomiya Museum of Art (宇都宮美術館, Utsunomiya Bijutsukan) opened in a wooded area some 5 kilometres (3.1 mi) north of the centre of Utsunomiya, Tochigi Prefecture, Japan, in 1997. The collection includes works by Kuroda Seiki and Asai Chū, Paul Klee and Wassily Kandinsky, and special exhibitions are also mounted.

The Large Family (La Grande Famille) was created by René Magritte in 1963. At first glance, one immediately questions the appropriateness of the title for there is no image of a family, human or otherwise. However, that should not come as a surprise as Magritte was well-known to derive great pleasure in confusing his viewers.

The Israel Museum, Jerusalem

The Israel Museum was established in 1965 as Israel's foremost cultural institution and one of the world's leading encyclopedic museums. It is situated on a hill in the Givat Ram neighborhood of Jerusalem, adjacent to the Bible Lands Museum, the Knesset, the Israeli Supreme Court, and the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

René Magritte's masterpiece The Castle of the Pyrenees was commissioned by the artist's longtime friend Harry Torczyner. From a number of drawings proposed by Magritte, Torczyner selected one of a large rock surmounted by a castle. Torczyner added the suggestion of a sky on a clear day and a rough darkish sea because over the dark sea there rises the rock of hope, topped by a fortress, a castle.

The Tower of Pisa is a recurring subject in Magritte's work, repeatedly taken up in different versions: his art makes use of the iconic image, transforming it into a fantastic composition, in which the feather that supports the unstable monument subverts the laws of physics, a pure provocation that unsettles the balance between reality and fiction.

In his own words, Magritte was bothered with a question: How to show a glass of water in a painting in such a way that it would not be indifferent? And after he painted the dozens of glass images he came up with a dialectical composition that unites two opposite relations to the water – containing and repelling it. Magritte named this surreal painting as an homage to Hegel's dialectic.

A dark street at night, against the backdrop of a blue sky illuminated by morning light: with the paradoxical combination of day and night, René Magritte wants to create a shocking effect on the observer, capable, in his own words, "of surprising and enchanting. I call this force poetry". If the disturbance that a work of art arouses is poetry, this painting is pure poetry. The title also aims at this effect: it is enigmatic, it does not define the image represented, leading the observer to become estranged from reality.

The Seducer: where is he? He does not appear in the painting, he could be on the ship, or maybe he could be the person who observes the painting, or even the painter who paints it ... Magritte seduced by himself? The ship keeps on sailing, in an unreal sea, an ancient sailing ship that belongs to the past, timeless and without substance, made of the same water on which it sails. Pure surrealism, pure poetry.

Magritte painted The Son of Man as a self-portrait. It consists of a man in an overcoat and a bowler hat standing in front of a low wall, beyond which are the sea and a cloudy sky. The man's face is largely obscured by a hovering green apple. Another subtle feature is that the man's left arm appears to bend backwards at the elbow.

Black Magic is the title of a series of paintings depicting the artist's beloved wife, Georgette, symbolising a hymn to her beauty but also a provocation: The beloved's upper body takes on the colours of the sky, in a spell of black magic that transforms her into a half-heavenly and half-earthly woman. Who, if not she, the painter's muse, could have lent herself to such a spell?

A painting that looks at us as we look at it, that captures the observer, as in a mirror, in a disturbing game that is also a challenge to a surreal interpretation of reality.

Painted in 1934, Collective Invention is one of the typical works in which Magritte launches a provocation by subverting a traditional image: the mermaid, a symbol of seduction in the collective imagination, is here depicted, by inverting the components, as a disturbing creature with the head and body of a fish and the legs of a woman. The result is a disturbing, cold and repellent representation.

The Treachery of Images is also known as This is Not a Pipe and The Wind and the Song. The painting is sometimes given as an example of meta message conveyed by paralanguage, like Denis Diderot's This is not a story. One interpretation is that the pipe in the painting is not a pipe, but rather a drawing of a pipe.

Key to Dreams, 1930, is part of a series of works in which the artist combines words and objects, as in a children book, but opposing the image of the object with a name that does not correspond to it: it happens that reality has hidden meanings, especially when it comes to dreams; Magritte launches a provocation, an invitation to metaphorical and surreal thinking, not to just stop at appearances.

Edward Hopper, one of the great masters of American painting, was an American painter and illustrator famous for his artworks where scenes often are deserted, depicted with strong realism, whose predominantly female figures convey a sense of loneliness and incommunicability. Defined as "the painter of silence", he is also considered a precursor of Pop Art.

Art Institute of Chicago

The Art Institute of Chicago is the second largest art museum in the United States after the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and houses works from the 19th century, classical and contemporary art. In 2009, an extension designed by Renzo Piano was added, the Modern Wing, connected by a bridge to Millennium Park.

In this painting, one of the best-known artwork of twentieth-century, three customers, all lost in their own thoughts, sit apart. The viewer, drawn to the light, feels cut out from the scene by a seamless wall of glass. The four lonely and uncommunicative night owls seem as remote and divided from the viewer as they are from each other. Hopper acknowledged that in Nighthawks "unconsciously, probably, I was painting the loneliness of a large city."

On the border between nature and civilisation, between day and night, this gas station is located in an undefined, eerie area. In Hopper's 1940 painting not even the human presence succeeds in giving life to the scene, in which a sense of drama dominates: the exaltation of the alienating solitude of an American country road.

A typical example of Ernst's illusionistic Surrealism, The Attirement of the Bride represents a disturbing, nightmare situation, in an atmosphere of pomp that contrasts with the monstrous characters represented. Ernst here opts for an unusual painting technique, associating the decal with the oil color on canvas, thus obtaining the effect of a singular grainy texture.

In Le Sommeil (Sleep), Dalí recreated the kind of large, soft head and virtually non-existent body that had featured so often in his paintings around 1929. In this case, however, the face is certainly not a self-portrait. Sleep and dreams are par excellence in the realm of the unconscious, and consequently of special interest to psychoanalysts and Surrealists.

The Persistence of Memory' is the most famous painting of Salvador Dalí. The work shows three melted pocket watches arranged in the Catalan landscape in front of the rugged rocks of the Cap de Creus. A fly sits on one of the clocks, symbolizing how time flies. Another is eaten by ants, symbolizing transience and decay. In the centre of the picture a clock is running on an abstract face of the artist, shown in profile, which has closed its eyes.

Salvador Dalí (1904–1989) was a Spanish surrealist artist. Dalí was a skilled draftsman, best known for the striking and bizarre images in his work. His painterly skills are often attributed to the influence of Renaissance masters. Dalí was highly imaginative, and also enjoyed indulging in unusual and grandiose behavior. His eccentric manner sometimes drew more attention than his artwork.

Piet Mondrian (actually Pieter Cornelis Mondriaan) was a Dutch painter of classical modernism. The artist, who created the style of neoplasticism, is considered the most important representative of Dutch Constructivism as well as Concrete Art, as Theo van Doesburg called it. With his later work he was one of the founders of abstract painting.

Forced by World War II to move to New York, Mondrian was influenced by the hectic life of the city: his compositions, hung with a new orientation and deprived of black lines, become dynamic, evoking the rhythm of the metropolis. Victory Boogie Woogie is his latest, unfinished work, a symbol of a revolutionary modification of his art.

The three primary colors yellow, red and blue, the purest and most intense colours in the universe, are for Mondrian the means of expression of "universal beauty", just as white, black and gray allow him to introduce a wide range of variations and contrasts, which enrich this work of 1919, a structurally regular and repetitive pattern, a grid.

A set of geometric shapes and semicircles composed in a suspended structure that transmits the effect of a push upwards. Or is it an allusion to the features of a human face? "I don't choose form consciously; it chooses itself within me", Kandinsky said about this issue, confirming the approach to art shared with Paul Klee: starting from intuitively chosen forms, gradually suggesting references to the real world.

In 1920s, Kandinsky furthered his investigations into the correspondence between colors and forms and their psychological and spiritual effects. "The circle," claimed Kandinsky, "is the synthesis of the greatest oppositions. It combines the concentric and the eccentric in a single form and in equilibrium. Of the three primary forms, it points most clearly to the fourth dimension."

Kazimir Severinovich Malevich was a painter and main representative of the Russian avant-garde, a pioneer of Constructivism and founder of Suprematism. He was influenced by late impressionism, fauvism and cubism. His abstract suprematist painting The Black Square on a White Ground from 1915 is considered a milestone in modernist painting and is considered an „icon of modernism“.

In 1907 Malevich saw an exhibition by the Symbolist group of the Blue Rose and responded with a series of paintings imbued with religious mysticism, such as Assumption of the Virgin Mary 1907-18 and Shroud of Christ 1908. The following year the magazine 'The Golden Fleece' organised an exhibition that brought works by Van Gogh, Gauguin and Matisse to Moscow. The expressive colour and brushwork of these artists was evident in paintings such as Malevich's self-portrait 1908-10.

Slender figures on a staircase, moving away from the observer, as if to sanction an epochal fracture: this is the symbolisation of the announced closure of the Bauhaus school under the Nazis. A significant representation of the central theme of Schlemmer's work, that is the relationship between the human body and the environment: the dynamic human figures contrast with the static, geometric forms of the stairs.

In 1922, Oskar Schlemmer, a painter, sculptor and designer linked to the Bauhaus, created the Triadic Ballet to the music of Hindemith, a choreographic work of rationalist dance with which he transformed the dancers into real geometric figures. The costumes, devoid of any ornament, were inspired by three geometric shapes, circle, square and triangle; the ballet was divided into three acts, the protagonists were three dancers: the number three as a recurring element, right from the title.

Klee's education was eclectic, he dealt with painting, but also with poetry and music; no coincidence that the titles of many of his works are inspired by music, as in this painting, New Harmony, which is an investigation into the hidden mechanisms of reality: from the representation of single simple forms, through the phenomenon of composition, a complex form arises that sums all them up, coming to the work of art.

The history of National Gallery Prague is traced back to 5 February 1796, when a group of important patriotic Czech nobles joined a few citizen intellectuals in the decision to elevate the deteriorating public taste.

A young woman of intense beauty, porcelain skin, red hair, stares at the observer with a defiant, erotically charged gaze: the picture, painted in 1917, is pervaded by a magnetic energy that borders on aggressiveness, underlined by the model's contracted, nervous posture. How does a dog see the world? Marc's 'Russi' nestles peacefully on a bed of snow. The artist had to work on her coat for a long time before "a pure colour relationship between the yellow, the cold white of the snow, and the blue in it had been accomplished". For Marc, who founded the Blaue Reiter artists' association with Kandinsky and Macke, animals in harmony with nature embodied the idea of a pure and pristine life → an all-encompassing congruity of creation.

Painted in 1895, the work is actually entitled Love and Pain, and Munch himself pointed out that it depicts nothing more than a woman kissing a man on the neck. But the image is so powerful and disturbing that it has become a symbol of the bewitching, enigmatic female power over men, a vampire woman who seems to console and instead extinguishes male vitality. Striking against the gloomy background is the figure's flaming red hair, like drops of living blood.

The Belvedere Castle is a princely residence, a masterpiece of Austrian Baroque architecture, consisting of two palaces, the Upper Belvedere and the Lower Belvedere separated by splendid French gardens. The buildings house the Österreichische Galerie Belvedere, one of Vienna's best-loved museums.

Judith and Holofernes was created in 1901. It depicts the biblical character of Judith holding the severed head of Holofernes. Notwithstanding the alteration of features, one can recognise Klimt's friend (and, possibly, lover), Viennese socialite, Adele Bloch-Bauer.

Ethereal figures, floating in the water sensually abandoned to the current, their long hair softly loose in the waves: an artistic representation that is also a statement of Klimt's vision of life, a recurring circle driven by a destiny beyond human control.

Max Liebermann (1847–1935) was a German painter and printmaker of Ashkenazi Jewish ancestry, and one of the leading proponents of Impressionism in Germany and continental Europe. He has gained increasing prominence for his 'revolutionary' style and brushstroke. Liebermann's quality of painting is today compared by many experts to the likes of Renoir - even surpassing it in some respects.

Oscar-Claude Monet (1840-1926) was a French painter, a founder of French Impressionist painting and the most consistent and prolific practitioner of the movement's philosophy of expressing one's perceptions before nature. The term „Impressionism“ is derived from the title of his painting Impression, Sunrise, exhibited in 1874 in the first independent exhibition mounted by Monet and his associates as an alternative to the Salon de Paris.

Art Institute of Chicago

The Art Institute of Chicago is the second largest art museum in the United States after the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and houses works from the 19th century, classical and contemporary art. In 2009, an extension designed by Renzo Piano was added, the Modern Wing, connected by a bridge to Millennium Park.

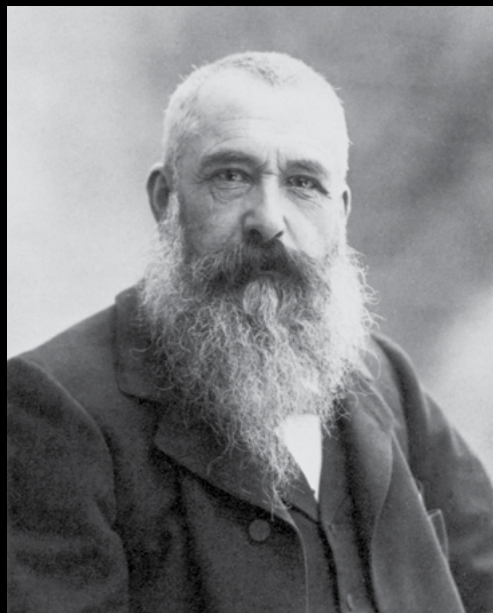

“One instant, one aspect of nature contains it all,” said Claude Monet, referring to his late masterpieces, the water landscapes that he produced at his home in Giverny between 1897 and his death in 1926. These works replaced the varied contemporary subjects he had painted from the 1870s through the 1890s with a single, timeless motif—water lilies.

The famous portrait, presented in Paris at the "Quatrième exposition des peintres impressionnistes et symbolistes" in 1893, is a small-format painting, made by the painter during the brief period in which the stormy relationship between her and the musician lasted. The work represents the young composer in an almost picturesque way, with goggles and an old hat, an emblem of the Montmartre Bohème, painted with powerful strokes and vibrant colors that seem to anticipate Expressionist painting.

Bathers at Asnières is an oil painting from 1884, depicting a suburban, quiet Parisian river scene. Individual figures whose clothes are sculpturally piled up on the riverbank, as well as trees, strict border walls and buildings and the Seine are depicted in a formal layout. A combination of complex brushstroke techniques and a careful application of contemporary colour theory gives the composition a feeling of gentle liveliness and timelessness.

Painted in 1884, this work caused a stir when it was exhibited at the Salon de Paris because Madame Gautreau's very low-cut dress and very white skin gave a feeling of nudity that was considered scandalous, to the point that Singer Sargent changed its title to Madame X and corrected a strap that originally ran down the arm. Despite this, the painting had to be removed from the Salon.

The green vase, the rum bottle, the ginger jar, the apples: all elements that Cézanne kept repeating in his paintings for years, not because he was particularly interested in these objects, but rather to experiment with different images of them through the overlapping of brushstrokes and tones. The recurring theme of the Bathers is clearly of classical inspiration and aims to represent the dream of a lost unity between human being and nature, a mythical harmony that depicts the female element as a symbol of creative energy and nature as a source of refuge from worries. The three Large Bathers works, which Cézanne worked on in his final years from 1895 to 1906, are considered his spiritual testament.

This painting may be Renoir's earliest signed canvas. Its sensitive display of color and light communicates an ideal of delicate, youthful beauty. The luminous tones of the background drapery and of the child's white blouse result from the artist's careful observation of reflected light and color on translucent materials. The delicate nuances of color, particularly in the young girl's face, reveal Renoir's previous training as a decorator of porcelain.

Along with Ingres, Eugène Delacroix is considered one of the most important masters of ancient painting and French Romanticism. A versatile artist, inspired by Rubens and the Venetian Renaissance, and by his friend Géricault in the use of color and emphasis on movement, he was also influenced by Lord Byron, with whom he shared a reverence for the majestic spectacles of nature.

Ferdinand Victor Eugène Delacroix was a French painter. He is considered a pioneer of Impressionism because of the vividness of his imagination and because of his generous use of color, and he exhibited paintings every year at the Paris Salon whose passionate subjects caused a sensation and not infrequently shocked. His work Jaguar Attacking a Horseman was created in 1855.

The Polish painter Jan Matejko was famous for his works depicting historical characters and battle scenes, such as the famous Battle of Grunwald, and for the patriotic intent that animated him and which made his painting an effective way of spreading the national patriotic spirit. He also decorated the church of St. Mary in Krakow.

The National Museum in Warsaw

The National Museum of Warsaw was founded in 1862 and exhibits Polish painting from the 13th century, foreign painting, ancient Egyptian, Greek and Roman art, numismatics, decorative arts. The modernist-style building was built between 1927 and 1938 on a project by Tadeusz Tolwiński.

Polish painter famous for his historical representations, such as the battle of Grunwald, Jan Matejko tried to animate the patriotic spirit in his people through his works. In this famous painting, Stańczyk, the court jester of King Sigismund I, symbolizes national conscience: seated disconsolately on a chair, he seems to feel the tragic end of the wars against Moscow. The painting made Stańczyk one of the most legendary and beloved figures in Polish culture.

The portrait of Marcel Proust, painted in 1892 by the French painter Jacques-Émile Blanche, is a famous work, exhibited at the Musée d'Orsay in Paris: emblem of an era made of refinement and love for detail, Proust is depicted there twenty-year-old, pale and very elegant, with a buttonhole, on whose symbolism academics debate: camellia, as odorless flower for the asthmatic Proust, or orchid, symbol of Swann's passion for Odette in "À la recherche du temps perdu"?

Eugène Henri Paul Gauguin (1848–1903) was a French Post-Impressionist artist. Unappreciated until after his death, Gauguin is now recognized for his experimental use of color and Synthetist style that were distinct from Impressionism. Toward the end of his life, he spent ten years in French Polynesia, and most of his paintings from this time depict people or landscapes from that region.

Van Gogh's paintings of Sunflowers are among his most famous. He did them in Arles, in the south of France, in 1888 and 1889. Vincent painted a total of five large canvases with sunflowers in a vase, with three shades of yellow 'and nothing else'. In this way, he demonstrated that it was possible to create an image with numerous variations of a single colour, without any loss of eloquence.

These fishermen's boats appear slightly unreal. Compared to the irregular surface of the sandy beach, they've been painted in an overly two-dimensional way. The boats are made up of areas of uniform colour within strong outlines. Furthermore, the boats don't cast shadows on the beach. These stylistic elements were familiar to Van Gogh from his collection of Japanese prints.

Van Gogh's dozens of self-portraits were an important part of his painterly output. Most likely, Van Gogh's self-portraits depict the face as it appeared in the mirror he used to reproduce his face, i.e. his right side in the painting is actually the left side of his face. This self-portrait was created between 1887 and 1888.

Painted in 1886, when he was attending the Academy in Antwerp, this small painting, now part of the permanent collection of the Van Gogh Museum in Amsterdam, is considered to be a pupil's joke, as if the skeleton were making fun of the members of the Academy and their old-fashioned attitude: drawing skeletons was in fact a customary exercise at the Academy, but the young Van Gogh was bored and found it pointless.

Van Gogh saw the Potato Eaters as a showpiece, for which he deliberately chose a difficult composition to prove he was on his way to becoming a good figure painter. The painting had to depict the harsh reality of country life, so he gave the peasants coarse faces and bony, working hands. It is one of Van Gogh's most famous works.

Painted in 1890 and exhibited in the Kröller-Müller Museum in Otterlo in the Netherlands, Country Road in Provence by Night, also known as Road with Cypress and Star, is tinged with a poignant melancholy: Van Gogh is aware to be close to death, and paints the evening star and the crescent moon, representing the old and the new, divided by the cypress, like an obelisk, symbol of death.

In a letter dated 1888 to his brother Theo, referring to the postman Joseph-Étienne Roulin, who had become his friend, Van Gogh wrote : "Now I'm working with another model, a postman in a blue uniform with gold trimmings, a big, bearded face, very Socratic. (...) A more interesting man than many people." He painted more portraits of the postman Roulin than of any other person, apart from himself.

Georges-Pierre Seurat (1859–1891) was a French post-Impressionist artist. He is best known for devising the painting techniques known as chromoluminarism as well as pointillism. Seurat's artistic personality was compounded of qualities that are usually supposed to be opposed and incompatible: on the one hand, his extreme and delicate sensibility, on the other, a passion for logical abstraction and an almost mathematical precision of mind.

Aleksander Gierymski, (1850-1901) a Polish painter who lived in Italy for a long time at the end of the 19th century, is considered a precursor of Impressionism and representative of Realism: his painting often depicted scenes of everyday life with vivid details and attention to humble people.

Painted in 1880, this work represents with detailed realism the sadness and hopelessness of the elderly, poorly dressed vendor, contrasted with the brightness of the colour of the oranges, a symbol of warmth and vitality. The painting was stolen during the Second World War, found in Germany and returned to Poland in 2011.

It is famous for its collection of Impressionist masterpieces and for significant examples of architecture, photography, decorative and industrial art.

One piece that illustrates this distinctive approach – Realism and Impressionism – is The Luncheon on the Grass a large-scale painting that has become one of Manet's—and modern art's—most famous works. Like most Impressionist works, it features an ordinary situation: two female and two male subjects sharing a picnic—represented as a still life in the lower left corner—in a forest.

Gustave Courbet painted this work between 1843 and 1845, an oil self-portrait far away from traditional poses, almost challenging the academic rigidity of the pictorial art of his time. With this representation of himself, Courbet performed a provocative act, proving once again to be a genuine free spirit, as in his famous work 'The Origin of the World' in which he dared to depict the female sex with shocking realism.

This was one of the prints published in Thirty-Six Views of Mount Fuji that helped secure Hokusai's fame and popularity within Japan and overseas. It depicts Mount Fuji in a deep, saturated red; thin white lines of snow tracing lines down from the tip of the peak. Small clusters of clouds fill the sky, and tiny trees grow to the base of the mountain, indicating its massive size. Hokusai's infatuation with Mount Fuji was much more than an admiration of its beauty.

Pinacoteca di Brera, Milan

The Brera Art Gallery (Italian: Pinacoteca di Brera) is the main public gallery for paintings in Milan, Italy. It contains one of the foremost collections of Italian paintings, an outgrowth of the cultural program of the Brera Academy, which shares the site in the Palazzo Brera.

It is one of the emblematic images of the Pinacoteca and perhaps the most widely reproduced Italian painting of the whole of the 19th century, created with the aim of symbolizing the love of the motherland and thirst for life on the part of the young nation that had emerged from the Second War of Independence and which now placed so many hopes in its new rulers. Hayez painted other versions of it, now in various European collections.

Like the Oedipus painted by Flandrin's master Ingres, this study of a nude youth was sent to Paris in 1837 as representative of the work of the fourth-year students at the French Academy in Rome. Ingres' purism is here taken to extremes: the human body is close to achieving the primeval form of the circle.

Heinrich Jakob Fried studied at the art school in Augsburg and at the Academy in Munich under Langer and Cornelius and initially turned mainly to history painting in the Romantic sense. In 1830 he published a lithographic collection of views of historical monuments in the Palatinate under the title "Erinnerung an die Vorzeit, oder die Rheinpfalz". From 1834 to 1837 he stayed in Italy, and in 1845 he received the position of curator of the Kunstverein in Munich, which he held until his death.

The Blue Grotto of Capri is probably the most famous picture of the late romantic painter Heinrich Jakob Fried. The rocky cave had been rediscovered in 1826 by the painters August Kopisch and Ernst Fries and soon advanced to become one of the most popular destinations for German travelers to Italy.

Celebrated in the history of music as the "poet of the piano", Fryderyk Chopin was a famous Polish composer and pianist, gifted with a virtuosic technique and much loved in Parisian and international salons. His tormented love life, the association of his music with the patriotic spirit, poor health and early death made him the most emblematic musician of the romantic period. Eugène Delacroix portrayed him in 1838 in this famous painting.

Romanticism | 214

Joseph Mallord William Turner (1775–1851), known in his time as William Turner, was an English Romantic painter, printmaker and watercolourist. He is known for his expressive colourisations, imaginative landscapes and turbulent, often violent marine paintings. He left behind more than 550 oil paintings, 2,000 watercolours, and 30,000 works on paper.

Tate Britain (known from 1932 to 2000 as the Tate Gallery) is part of the Tate network of galleries in England and its oldest gallery, having opened in 1897. It houses a substantial collection of the art of the United Kingdom since Tudor times.

The hereditary seat of the Dukes of Norfolk, the imposing and stolid stone form of Arundel Castle occupies the central register of Turner's drawing. The fortification, built atop a motte, was situated at the mouth of the River Arun for defensive purposes during the reign of William the Conqueror.¹ Turner seems to have depicted the south bailey of the Castle which gives onto the Arun valley.

Caspar David Friedrich (1774–1840) was a 19th-century landscape painter, generally considered the most important German artist of his generation. He is best known for his mid-period allegorical landscapes which typically feature contemplative figures silhouetted against night skies, morning mists, barren trees or Gothic ruins. Friedrich's paintings characteristically set a human presence in diminished perspective amid expansive landscapes.

Stubbs's characteristically uncompromising spirit, and his quest for calibrated composition and balanced tones, are clearly evident in this portrait of Lord Grosvenor's young Arabian stallion. He employs a low horizon, with rolling hills and soft foliage, to effectively display the warm tones of the chestnut Arabian. The sprightly mien of the colt, ears pricked and nostrils wide, is set in contrast with the reassuring demeanor of the groom.

Neue Pinakothek, Munich

The Neue Pinakothek, located in the area of the great museums of Munich, exhibits works from the post-French Revolution period up to Symbolism and Art Nouveau. Founded by Ludwig I of Bavaria in 1853, destroyed during the Second World War, it was redesigned by Alexander von Branca and rebuilt in 1981.

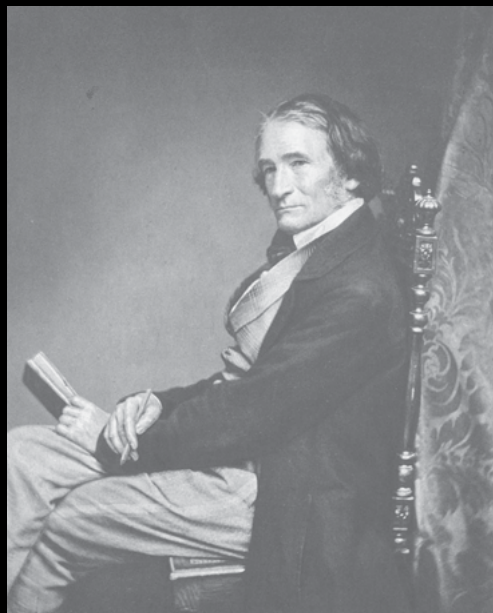

Joseph Karl Stieler created the portrait of Goethe on commission from King Ludwig I of Bavaria. In 1828, the artist traveled to Weimar with a letter of recommendation from the king to do the preliminary work. Stieler has depicted the poet and scholar Goethe as a half-figure sitting at his desk. The upper body is turned frontally towards the viewer, while the head is turned to the right and the gaze is directed sideways out of the picture.

Jacques-Louis David (1748–1825) was a French painter in the Neoclassical style, considered to be the preeminent painter of the era. In the 1780s his cerebral brand of history painting marked a change in taste away from Rococo frivolity toward classical austerity and severity and heightened feeling, harmonizing with the moral climate of the final years of the Ancien Régime.

Royal College of Music Museum of Instruments

The Royal College of Music Museum has an important collection of artworks and instruments spanning more than five centuries of history. It is divided into three thematic areas, music as creation, as craftsmanship and as performance. It owns precious artifacts, including the famous portraits of Haydn and Farinelli.

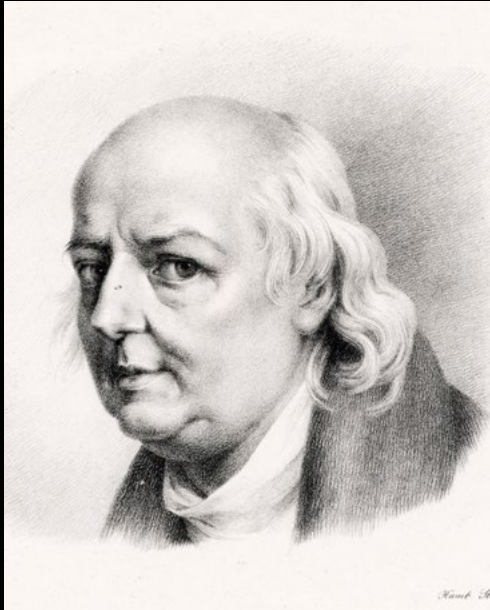

This portrait of Joseph Haydn was painted during Haydn's first London visit in 1790–91. It was probably commissioned by the music seller and publisher John Bland for marketing purposes. The portrait was subsequently engraved, also by Hardy, and Bland published it, ensuring it reached a wider audience. Even now it is one of the College's most widely reproduced pictures and has become an iconic image of the composer.

Carel Fabritius died on October 12, 1654, at the age of 32, in the explosion of an underground powder magazine. He had just been portraying the sexton of the Oude Kerk of Delft. Carel Fabritius created The Goldfinch in 1654. It is striking both for its naturalistic rendering and the simplicity of the motif, which lends a special note to Baroque painting in the Netherlands and can probably be attributed to the function of the panel (→ Baroque). "The Thistle Finch" depicts a bird at its feeding bowl. The slight underside elevates the goldfinch, which can be read as a factual description as well as an elevation of the animal.

Palazzo Barberini is a historic building in Rome, built between 1625-1633, that hosts part of the Galleria Nazionale d'Arte Antica and the Istituto Italiano di Numismatica. The Galleria was founded in 1895 to exhibit works coming from various private collections by Filippo Lippi, Raphael, Titian, Tintoretto, El Greco, Holbein, Caravaggio, Guido Reni, Guercino and others, from the 13th to the 18th century.

Traditionally this painting has been attributed to Guido Reni and considered to be a portrait of Beatrice Cenci before the execution to which she was condemned because she was accused of the murder of her incestuous and violent father; in fact, it was painted by Ginevra Cantofoli (1618-1672), a Bolognese artist famous for her works characterized by melancholic and sweetly sensual atmospheres.

Painted in 1641, The Scholar at the Lectern was titled Father of the Jewish Bride when it was bought by King Stanislaus of Poland and considered connected to The Jewish Bride, as they were both painted in the same year and on the same type of board, poplar wood, of the same size. In fact, this hypothesis was denied by the analysis of the composition of the two paintings, which do not have the same pattern, as is usually the case in works performed in pairs by Rembrandt.

Of all the self-portraits in which Rembrandt depicts emotions, this one is probably the most engaging. He looks startled here, with pursed lips and wide-open eyes. You see him slightly from below, so that he seems to be recoiling. The etching is clearly executed and clever, with the contours of the shoulders and the cap fading into the edges.

Peter Paul Rubens (1577–1640) was a Flemish artist. He is considered the most influential artist of Flemish Baroque tradition. Rubens's compositions reference erudite aspects of classical and Christian history. His unique Baroque style emphasized movement, colour, and sensuality, which followed the immediate, dramatic artistic style promoted in the Counter-Reformation. Rubens specialized in making altarpieces, portraits, landscapes, and history paintings of mythological and allegorical subjects.

Michelangelo Merisi (Michele Angelo Merigi or Amerighi) da Caravaggio (1571–1610) was an Italian painter active in Rome for most of his artistic life. During the final four years of his life he moved between Naples, Malta and Sicily. His paintings combine a realistic observation of the human state, both physical and emotional, with a dramatic use of lighting, which had a formative influence on Baroque painting.

Palazzo Barberini Corsini, Rome

Palazzo Barberini is a historic building in Rome, built between 1625-1633, that hosts part of the Galleria Nazionale d'Arte Antica and the Istituto Italiano di Numismatica. The Galleria was founded in 1895 to exhibit works coming from various private collections by Filippo Lippi, Raphael, Titian, Tintoretto, El Greco, Holbein, Caravaggio, Guido Reni, Guercino and others, from the 13th to the 18th century.

A scene of cruel spectacularity: the beheading of the Assyrian leader Holofernes by the young Jewish widow Judith, who thus saves her people, becoming a symbol of liberation. A painting of great contrasts: first of all, stylistically, between light and shadow, but also between the servant's old age and the protagonist's youth, between life and death, between strength and fragility.

Doménikos Theotokópoulos (1541–1614), most widely known as El Greco („The Greek“), was a Greek painter, sculptor and architect of the Spanish Renaissance. „El Greco“ was a nickname, referring to his origin. He normally signed his paintings with his name in Greek letters, Δομήνικος Θεοτοκόπουλος. He is best known for tortuously elongated figures and often fantastic or phantasmagorical pigmentation, marrying Byzantine traditions with Western painting.

The National Portrait Gallery is an art museum in London that opened in 1856. It houses portraits of historically important and famous British people. Portraits are selected based on the importance of the sitter, not the artist who created the work. The collection includes photographs, caricatures, paintings, drawings and sculptures.

Anne Boleyn was the second of Henry VIII's six wives and Queen of England from 1533 to 1536. This painting is probably based on a contemporary portrait that no longer survives. Boleyn was described as having a long neck, a wide mouth and with "eyes that were black and beautiful". This portrait has recently been structurally conserved following a successful fundraising campaign and the generous support of public donations.

Leonardo di ser Piero da Vinci (1452–1519), was an Italian polymath of the Renaissance whose areas of interest included invention, drawing, painting, sculpture, architecture, science, music, mathematics, engineering, literature, anatomy, geology, astronomy, botany, paleontology, and cartography. He is widely considered one of the greatest painters of all time (despite perhaps only 15 of his paintings having survived, the Mona Lisa being the most famous).

Private Collection

Salvator Mundi was the only one work of Leonardo to remain in a private collection. It was sold at auction for $450.3 million in 2017 by Christie's to Prince Badr bin Abdullah, setting a new record for most expensive painting ever sold at public auction.

Louvre, Paris Mundi dates to c. 1500. Long thought to be a copy of a lost original veiled with overpainting, it was rediscovered, restored, and included in a major Leonardo exhibition at the National Gallery, London. It is one of fewer than 20 known works by Leonardo.

Santa Maria delle Grazie, Milan

The Church of Santa Maria delle Grazie, situated in the heart of Milan, is an architectural masterpiece, an emblem of the Catholic religion, strongly characterized by the "Last Supper", Leonardo Da Vinci's fresco in the refectory. The church was included in the UNESCO World Heritage List in 1980, as one of the best examples of Renaissance art.

The Last Supper of Leonardo da Vinci (Cenacolo Vinciano) is one of the most famous paintings in the world. This artwork was painted between 1494 and 1498 under the government of Ludovico il Moro and represents the last "dinner" between Jesus and his disciples. In order to create this unique work, Leonardo carried out an exhaustive research creating an infinity of preparatory sketches.

The Gallerie dell'Accademia in Venice exhibit Venetian art from the 14th to the 18th century, by artists such as Tintoretto, Tiziano, Canaletto. The collection includes the famous drawing by Leonardo "The Vitruvian Man", which is however rarely exhibited since, being on paper, it is extremely fragile.

Crivelli was born in Venice and probably trained with Squarcione in Padua. He was active as a painter by 1457 when he was condemned in Venice for adultery. He was very successful as a maker of altarpieces in the Marches. Crivelli was a fine technical painter and his pictures are in a good state of preservation. He had a strong linear decorative sense and was a brilliant colourist.

The Madonna, her face an oval of unnatural perfection and her slender hands a model of sophistication, offers the Christ Child a pear, possibly symbolising the sweetness of Redemption. The two figures are set beneath a trellis of woven branches whose fruit alludes to Christ's Passion and death. The candle, the vase of flowers and fruit on the step are intended to look like offerings from the observer, who is thus prompted to interact more closely with the painted space.

Little is known about Van Eyck's life, despite the fact that he is considered the forerunner of 15th century painting in the Netherlands: famous for his meticulous depiction of reality, attention to detail and study of light, he contributed to the spread of oil painting in place of tempera, improving the technique. His are the famous Ghent Polyptych (1432), Man with a Red Turban (1433) and Portrait of Mr and Mrs Arnolfini (1434).

National Gallery, London

Founded in 1824, the National Gallery is located in central London's Trafalgar Square and houses more than 2,300 paintings, including important works by Rembrandt, Velázquez, Van Gogh and Michelangelo. It is among the most visited museums in the world, renowned for its extensive collection spanning the history of Western painting from the Renaissance to Post-Impressionism.

Painted by Jan van Eyck in 1434, the Portrait of the Arnolfini couple is an oil painting exhibited at the National Gallery in London, depicting the merchant from Lucca Giovanni Arnolfini with his wife Costanza. The accuracy of details typical of Flemish painting highlights some significant symbolism: the fur and the carpet indicate the prosperity of the rich merchant, the dog and the clogs are symbols of conjugal fidelity, while the oranges represent fertility.

When Kissing Coppers appeared on the wall of a pub on a Brighton street in 2004, it caused quite a stir. With a biting irony, Banksy portrays a couple of policemen who indulge in a passionate kiss. Police are often mocked in Banksy's works and in this case, from a symbol of repression, they are transformed into an anti-homophobic icon. Today, in Brighton, you can only see a copy of the original work, which was sold by the owner of the pub for an astounding sum.

The work depicts a soldier painting a large peace symbol: the satirical juxtaposition is intended to make the viewer question the army's role of 'keeping the peace', a central theme in Banksy's work. The peace sign originally symbolized the British Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (CND) of 1957, Banksy's inclusion of it here contrasts with the fact that the soldier should act on behalf of the government, but is now represented as activist and vandal, graffitiing the wall in protest.

Straddling the world of five minute graffiti and high consumer culture, Brandalised™ is a street brand that creates genre busting product ranges. Abrupt, funny, hard hitting, romantic, offensive and childlike. You'll find 'Teddies' and 'Atom Bombs', 'Love Hearts' and 'Rocket Launchers', 'Bored Lovers' and 'Naughty Boys'. Featured on national and international TV news globally, this truly is the world's accessible art. There is nothing else like it in the world.

This product is made under license from Full Colour Black Ltd. All images are owned or licensed by Full Colour Black Ltd. and may not be reproduced in any way without prior permission. Source images have been licensed from independent photographers throughout the world and have then been edited or recreated with design tools. This product is inspired by graffiti attributed to the artist known as Banksy. As Banksy chooses to remain both anonymous and invisible, Full Colour Black Ltd. have set up a little piggy bank for royalty payments which, when not claimed, are donated annually to UK charities. To our knowledge, Banksy does not produce or endorse socks or print photo canvases or paint commissions or sell freshly baked bagels.

With biting irony, Banksy portrays a policeman fining a little girl with a red heart balloon who has driven too fast on her tricycle. Law officers are often mocked in Banksy's works and in this case the policeman becomes a symbol of repression against harmless and vulnerable people.

A work depicting Napoleon Bonaparte, deceptively reminiscent of Jacques-Louis David's 19th-century painting, Napoleon Crossing the Alps, appeared in Paris in 2018. Napoleon is depicted as if entangled in his cape, which here is deceptively reminiscent of the niqab, the face veil worn by Muslim women. Laïc France banned their use back in 2010.

A disturbing, enigmatic, unsettling work: a faceless, inert boy, a knife in his hand, his head hanging, a bloodstain on the sweatshirt right where the brand logo usually is. What's the message? Probably Banksy wants to protest against the society that annihilates the hopes, energy, and sometimes the life of the younger generations.

This artwork, made in 2012, the year in which Queen Elizabeth celebrated her Diamond Jubilee, shows the Queen with the recognizable jagged blue and red stripe of the popular singer David Bowie 70's creation Ziggy Stardust. A famous duo blended together by a legendary street artist makes this artwork an iconic pop culture artwork, depicting different aspects of life: the Queen represents royalty and power while Ziggy Stardust symbolizes a message of hope, peace and love.

Flower Bomber shows a masked Palestinian throwing a bouquet of flowers. The drawing first appeared on a wall on the side of a garage on the highway from Beit Sahour opposite Citroen/Peugeot car dealership in Jerusalem. The portrait is reminiscent of the images from the street and campus riots of the 1960s. The anger and frustration can be seen in the man's posture as he tries to bomb the establishment with flowers.

Banksy stenciled his signature rats in different places around Paris. Interpreted as symbol for the ordinary working class people of the world, the rats interact with the local environment, such as building façades and graffiti, as the one discovered on the Left Bank of the Seine sitting beneath the words May 1968": the number eight is turned on its side, perhaps representing the decline of the city's revolutionary spirit, resembling Disney-esque mouse ears, decorated by Minnie Mouse's polka-dot bow.

This artwork appeared on a few walls in the streets of London, including the Chelsea area in 2022. The Radar Rat is shown standing on its hind legs, wearing headphones and holding a tape recorder in one hand and a sonic radar in the other. Behind him is a hand-painted red (or sometimes orange) spiral. He appears to be listening intently to the world around him, in what seems to be a comment on the ever-increasing presence of surveillance equipment in cities such as London.

This artwork is a political message meant to criticize those who are part of the Palestine-Iranian conflict. Painted on the concrete part of the West Bank Wall used to separate Palestine and Israeli, the graffiti art features a white dove with its wings out wide in an open arm stance holding an olive branch in its beak which is supposed to be the symbol of peace, but the dove depicted here wears an armored vest with the target pointed at its chest.

"It is only with the heart that one can see rightly; what is essential is invisible to the eye": this sentence by the Little Prince contains all his philosophy of life, which celebrates the authenticity of those who look at the world with pure eyes, and know how to arrive up to the heart of the listener, even adults' one who no longer know how to listen, because it is the universal language of feelings and beauty, the language of the heart. A beloved character all over the world, translated into more than 300 languages and dialects.

The Mexican painter is one of the most important representatives of a popular development of Surrealism, whereby her work sometimes showed elements of New Objectivity. This combination with autobiographical reference places her work far above Naïve Art. Frida Kahlo advanced to become a strong personality of her gender, in contrast to the social image of women prevailing at the time. She not only made a name for herself as a painter, but also as an emancipated woman who, despite her lifelong health problems, fought politically for peace and freedom. Meanwhile, her physical pain as well as her childishness became the main theme of her numerous works.

Hummingbirds are one of the recurring themes in the painting of Frida Kahlo, an artist whose work is permeated by a passion for life and nature, despite her disabling health problems: "feet, what do I need you for, when I have wings to fly?" Antoni Gaudí i Cornet (1852–1926) was a Catalan architect known as the greatest exponent of Catalan Modernism. Gaudí's works have a highly individualized, one-of-a-kind style. Most are located in Barcelona, including his main work, the church of the Sagrada Família, the most visited monument in Spain. Gaudí's work was influenced by his passions in life: architecture, nature, and religion. His work enjoys global popularity.

François Auguste René Rodin (1840–1917) was a French sculptor generally considered the progenitor of modern sculpture. He was schooled traditionally, took a craftsman-like approach to his work, and desired academic recognition, although he was never accepted into Paris's foremost school of art. Rodin remains one of the few sculptors widely known outside the visual arts community.

Musée Rodin, Paris

The Rodin Museum is a building in which Rodin spent the last years of his life, leaving all the works in his possession to the French state to create a museum. Other artists lived here in the 1900s, among them Cocteau, Matisse, Isadora Duncan. The museum also houses works by Monet, Renoir & van Gogh.

Pedro Machuca (c. 1490–1550) is mainly remembered as the Spanish architect responsible for the design of the Palace of Charles V (begun 1528) adjacent to the Alcazar in Granada. The significance of this work is that it represents likely the first major classic Renaissance style building in Spain. Culturally, it represents the urge by the conquering Christians to challenge the hegemony of Moorish architecture.

Granada, Spain

The Alhambra is an important urban castle on the Sabikah Hill of Granada in Spain, considered one of the most important examples of the Moorish style of Islamic art. The Alhambra is one of the most visited tourist attractions in Europe and has been a World Heritage Site since 1984.

Anubis was an ancient Egyptian god, represented as a jackal-headed man and revered as protector of tombs, necropolises and the world of the dead, but also as an embalmer and inventor of mummification. During the Middle Kingdom (ca. 2055 BC - 1650 BC) he was replaced by Osiris as lord of the afterlife. One of his duties was to accompany the souls of the dead to the afterlife and to carry out the weighing of the heart, which was decisive for the admission of souls to the kingdom of the dead.

The symbols of ancient Egypt in mythology and hieroglyphic writing had great social, religious, cultural and even recreational significance: they referred to daily life, death, love, social relations and power. The term hieroglyph derives from the ancient Greek and means "engraved sacred signs" with reference to engraving because these symbols were usually engraved on the stone as monumental writing, such as on temples, thus assuming a sacred value.

In the religion of ancient Egypt Horus was a deity depicted as a falcon, or a human with a falcon's head, whose cult characterized the entire Egyptian civilization from prehistoric times to the Ptolemaic era. He was the lord of prophecy, music, art and beauty, the god of hunters. In the myth of Osiris, Horus is the son of Isis and Osiris, and rival of Seth, god of chaos, murderer of his father. He represents the first national deity, as it was believed that the pharaoh was Horus' personification on earth.

In Egyptian mythology the name of the Four Sons of Horus is attributed to the four deities who protected the internal organs after mummification: they were the patrons of the canopes, the vessels, where the entrails of the dead were kept. Their names also indicated the four cardinal points. Duamutef, with the head of a jackal, protected the stomach; Hapi, with the head of a baboon, the lungs; Imseti, with human head, the liver; Qebehsenuef, with the hawk's head, intestines.

Isis is a deity of ancient Egypt, the centerpiece of the myth of the divine king Osiris, whom she resurrects after his assassination, protecting their heir Horus. She was therefore considered the divine mother of the pharaoh. Osiris and Isis became in the first millennium BC. the most revered Egyptian gods. Isis, goddess of fertility, life, health, had infinite magical powers: it was believed that she protected the kingdom from its enemies, ruled the skies and nature and had power over fate.

Nefertiti (1370 BC-c.1330 BC), wife of the pharaoh Akhenaten, supported her husband in spreading the cult of the only god Aten, the sun, a new religion that undermined the ancient one, also causing political unrest. Her image of queen remains linked to that of her husband: the couple's images of intimacy are popular. The bust of Nefertiti, attributed to the sculptor Thutmose, depicts her in all its beauty and is exhibited at the Ägyptisches Museum und Papyrussammlung in the Neues Museum in Berlin.

Tutankhamun (1341 BC – c. 1323 BC) was an Egyptian pharaoh of the period of Egyptian history known as the New Kingdom, whose name is linked to the discovery of his tomb by Howard Carter, in the Valley of the Kings, in 1922. The funerary mask of Tutankhamun and the priceless treasure of precious objects found are now preserved in the Egyptian Museum in Cairo. The mask remains the most popular symbol from ancient Egypt and one of the best known artworks in the world.

Thutmose, also known as „The King's Favourite and Master of Works, the Sculptor Thutmose“, was an Ancient Egyptian sculptor. He flourished around 1350 BC, and is thought to have been the official court sculptor of the Egyptian pharaoh Akhenaten in the latter part of his reign. A German archaeological expedition digging in Akhenaten's deserted city of Akhetaton, at Amarna, found his studio complex in 1912.

1. Assignment of Claims

The supplier is entitled to assign his claims from delivery and service for financing purposes. In the event of assignment, all present and future claims arising from our business relationship and all ancillary rights (such as our reservation of proprietary rights) are transferred. The customer will find a corresponding note on his invoice.

2. Delivery and Shipping

The start of the delivery period specified by us presupposes the clarification of all technical questions as well as the timely and proper fulfillment of the customer's obligations. The plea of the unfulfilled contract remains reserved. The specified delivery periods are only approximate. They are, however, respected as much as possible by us. If the delivery is delayed the customer does not have to be notified. Firm deals are not made.

The supplier is entitled to partial deliveries. Each partial delivery must be regarded as a closed individual transaction and as such is subject to these contractual conditions. If we are in default then a reasonable additional delivery period must be provided in writing.

Breakdowns, traffic disruptions, interruptions in the supply of electricity, heating, raw materials or similar at our or our suppliers extend the delivery time accordingly. Force majeure and all other circumstances for which we are not responsible entitle us to withdraw from the contract in whole or in part. If a delivery is required for the delivery and this cannot be executed, we are entitled to withdraw from the contract. In this case we undertake to inform the customer about the unavailability and to refund payments if already done. Shipping is ex works at the expense and risk of the customer. The customer also bears the risk of transportation if we deliver in individual cases on our costs or for a charge. The choice of shipping method is up to us. Complaints due to changed article or color numbers will not be accepted.

3. Final provisions

Should individual provisions of these conditions of sale, delivery and payment be or become voidable or void, the remaining provisions shall remain unaffected and fully effective.

4. General

For our offers, sales, deliveries and other services, the following conditions apply. The customer or buyer recognizes the conditions as part of the contract by ordering or placing an order. Amendments, even if agreed with us, are only valid if confirmed in writing. Deviating conditions of our customers do not oblige us, even if we do not expressly contradict them. An exception applies in case of our written confirmation.

5. Offers and Conclusion of Contract

Offers by us are always non-binding until our written confirmation of the order. If an order is to be regarded as an offer according to § 145 BGB, we can accept it within two weeks. Contract modifications, amendments or collateral agreements require our written confirmation in order to be valid. The conditions apply in their respective version.

6. Payment

Payments are to be made free of charge according to the agreed payment terms. If nothing else has been agreed upon invoices are due 30 days met. All payments have to be executed cash, by bank transfer or check. The time of receipt is the credit on our account. Drafts are not considered as contractual means of payment. However, if a draft is accepted, there is no deferral of the receivables. The customer remains in default until the bill is honored. All costs and expenses of the bill then go to his own expense. The acceptance of checks and bills takes place only on account of payment and without guarantee for protest. Payments are to be made free of charge according to the agreed payment terms. If the term of payment is exceeded, the customer is in default. A reminder is not required. If the customer defaults on a payment, all other outstanding claims are immediately due for payment, without the need for a separate notice of default.

The contracting parties are obliged to pay default interest of at least 9% above the base interest rate of the European Central Bank from the beginning of the default. The assertion of higher interest and further damages caused by delay as well as all other legal consequences of the delay remains reserved. If the customer is in default, or circumstances become known after conclusion of the contract, which are likely to reduce the creditworthiness of the purchaser, all claims are due without regard to the duration of any accepted bills of exchange. Such circumstances further entitle us to execute outstanding services only against advance payment or security deposits, as well as to withdraw from the contract or to claim damages for non-performance. Proof of a reduction in creditworthiness shall be deemed to have been provided by the bank or a reputable credit agency.

7. Place of Performance and Jurisdiction

Place of fulfillment for delivery and payment is Mechernich. For all disputes arising directly or indirectly from the contract Bonn is agreed as the place of jurisdiction, insofar as the claims are asserted in the dunning procedure. Insofar as the customers are merchants, foreign contracting parties, legal persons under public law or special funds under public law, the contracting parties agree that Bonn is the place of jurisdiction for indirect or / and direct legal disputes arising from the contract. Regardless of the amount in dispute, the district court of Bonn or the regional court of Cologne has jurisdiction in the first instance at our discretion. This contract and the entire legal relationships of the parties are subject to the laws of the Federal Republic of Germany. The UN Sales Convention (CISG) are explicitly excluded.

8. Prices

The prices quoted are subject to change and are ex works without VAT and excluding packaging. We are free to invoice costs of packaging separately. If material or labor cost increases occur after the price lists have been created, if there are increased purchasing costs due to considerable exchange rate changes (above 10%) or if taxes or duties are increased we are entitled to adjust prices accordingly. No party has the right to withdraw from the contract because of this. Discounts granted and other price reductions are waived when applying for insolvency or settlement of our contracting party or after the partner has fallen into arrears.

9. Reservation of Proprietary Rights

All goods supplied by us remain the property of our company until the fulfillment of our entire claims against the respective customer, for whatever legal reason they may have arisen. The customer may only dispose of the delivered goods in regular business transactions. Despite the assignment the customer is authorized to sell the assigned goods in the proper course of business and to realize the proceeds. The authorization shall cease to exist with our revocation, to which we are entitled upon the occurrence of the default or the reduction in the creditworthiness of the customer. At our request the customer is obliged to disclose the assignment to its customers and to provide us with all information necessary to assert the claim and to hand over the necessary documents. Pledges or assignments of security of the reserved goods are prohibited to the purchaser. The customer must notify us immediately of a seizure or any other impairment of the rights of the reserved goods by third parties. He bears the cost of the intervention.

10. Right of Retention and Offsetting

The customer is not entitled to set off against our claims with counterclaims disputed by us. The offsetting with undisputed and legally established claims is permissible.

11. Submitted Documents

We reserve the right of ownership and copyrights to all documents provided to the customer in connection with placing the order, such as calculations, drawings, etc. These documents may not be disclosed to third parties without our express written permission. If we do not accept an offer from the customer within two weeks these documents must be returned to us immediately.

12. Warranty and Damages

Warranty rights of the customer expire twelve months after receipt of the goods. Obvious defects must be reported in writing immediately, but no later than 14 days after receipt of the goods; hidden defects must be reported in writing immediately after their discovery. If the complaint is not timely the goods are considered approved. Legitimate complaints do not exempt from the obligation of timely payment. For materials and equipment that are not from our own production, we accept only the warranty and other liability in the context of our promise to our suppliers. If the goods have a defect, we shall be entitled to supplementary performance within a reasonable period without prejudice to the right of the customer to reduce the subsequent performance in the event of failure or to withdraw from the contract at his discretion. Claims for defects do not exist in the event of insignificant deviation from the agreed quality, in the case of insignificant impairment of usability, in the case of natural wear and tear and in the event of damage arising from the transfer of risk through improper use of the object. We are not liable for slightly negligent violations of essential contractual obligations by our legal representatives or vicarious agents. This exclusion does not apply to physical and health damages caused by us.
