

David Lather

Intelligence Manager
Public Private Partnerships
Australian Taxation Office
david.lather@ato.gov.au

Short Description

David has worked at the Australian Taxation Office (ATO) for over 12 years, starting with the agency's graduate program. He spent five years as an auditor investigating complex cases of serious tax evasion, before his current position in public private partnerships. In his current position, his main role is to work with the Fintel Alliance, a world-first partnership between a variety of government agencies and private sector partners, to combat financial crime.

Full Bio

David has worked at the Australian Taxation Office (ATO) for over 12 years, starting with the agency's graduate program. Following the program, he worked in risk and compliance focusing on foreign sourced income for individuals, before spending five years as an auditor investigating complex cases of serious tax evasion.

He then moved to an intelligence role in combatting the shadow economy within the context of protecting workers' superannuation and other entitlements, before his current position in public private partnerships. In his current position, his main role is to work with the Fintel Alliance, a world-first partnership between a variety of government agencies and private sector partners, to combat financial crime.

David has bachelor degrees in finance and journalism, along with graduate certificates in intelligence analysis and fraud and financial crime.