Zeolite and Bentonite

LittoCat

To have a good rest

Bentonite is a natural clay mineral. In contact with liquids, bentonite absorbs 3.5 times its weight in water, making it an invaluable base for cat litter. Bentonite does not allow the bacterial environment to grow and acts as a natural drying agent, so it is very effective in creating a hygienic and odorless environment in the cat's bowl. One of the most important aspects of this type of cat litter is its compatibility with the environment and its inertness. We supply bentonite as a raw and pure granule - with or without carbon additives.

Bentonite

Zeolite

Zeolite is a hydrated aluminosilicate crystalline mineral that forms at the site of the reaction of volcanic rocks with alkaline groundwater.

Natural zeolites can adsorb up to 30% of their dry weight of various gases (such as ammonia and nitrogen), while they can adsorb more than 70% of water and up to 90% of some hydrocarbons. Zeolite has a high surface area and ion exchange capacity that provides exceptional performance and odor control when used as cat litter. Zeolite acts as a molecular sieve and absorbs ammonia ions, thereby minimizing the smell of animal waste. One of the most important properties of zeolite is its natural compatibility with the environment.
